

Sarina Schrager, MD, MS
WREN Medical Director

Dr. Schrager joined the University of Wisconsin Department of Family Medicine and Community Health as faculty at Northeast clinic in 1996. A graduate of Dartmouth College, Sarina received her MD degree from the University of Illinois College of Medicine at Chicago in 1992. She completed her residency in family medicine at the MacNeal Hospital program in Berwyn, Illinois in 1995 and then completed a self-designed fellowship in Women's Health at MacNeal that combined graduate work in Women's Studies with clinical care in family practice and low risk obstetrics. She received a MS in Population Health in 2011 with a focus on the epidemiology of osteoporosis in women with cognitive disabilities.

Her teaching focus is on women's health education for residents. She practices full spectrum family medicine at Northeast Clinic and works at the department doing faculty development and promotions and mentoring. She was the director of the Academic Fellowship from 2008-2020 and is currently the Editor in chief of the Wisconsin Medical Journal and the Medical Editor of FPM.

Dr. Schrager has a longstanding interest in practice based research and has worked with WREN for many years. Her current research interests include work life balance and shared decision making in cancer screening. She looks forward to working with researchers in real world primary care practices making discoveries that will impact the practice of primary care.
