

Dirk Steinert, MD
ThedaCare

Dirk Steinert, MD, MBA, FAAP, FACP grew up the son of a Physics professor and teacher in Madison, Indiana always dreaming of being a physician. He trained in Chicago and New Orleans at both Cook County and Charity Hospitals serving as Chief Residency in Internal Medicine and Pediatrics his last year at Tulane. Pursuing clinical excellence with an interest to understand how other clinicians do this work he earned his MBA at University of Wisconsin Milwaukee and a Certificate in Managing Healthcare Delivery at Harvard Business School.

Family life includes 3 children advancing in their chosen careers as young adults and a wife who leads a large outcomes-based research team. As the Ambulatory Chief Medical Officer at ThedaCare he is involved in the strategy of developing a growing workforce across central WI in rural, suburban and urban settings. He has served as a Principle Investigator for small clinical research projects and helps to facilitate other clinicians to engage in clinical research and educational activities such that they can be a part of our calling in medicine to continuously learn and teach.
